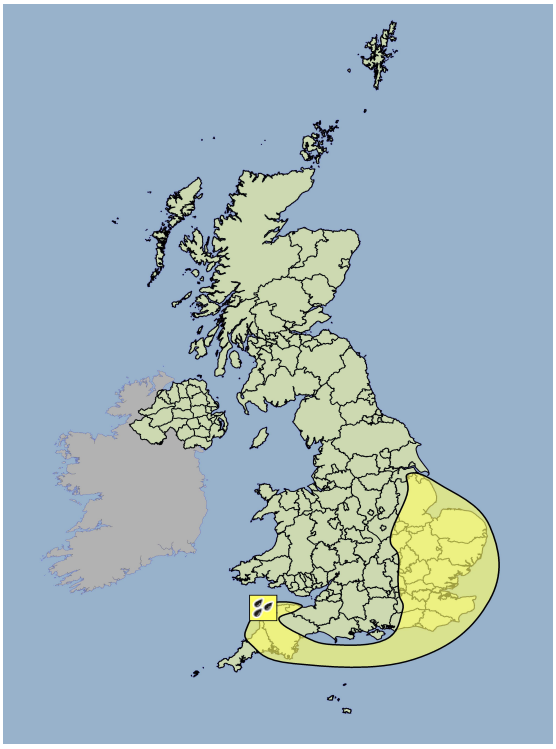
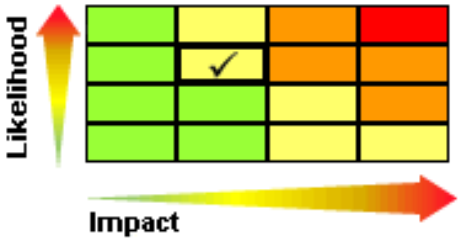
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of low pressure now across southeast England is bringing a combination of rather persistent and sometimes heavy rainfall, as well as strong winds blowing from the northeast, with gusts around 40 mph in places for a time.

The most persistent and heaviest rain will be over north or northeast facing hills in the southwest of England at first and then increasingly over the hills of the northeast Midlands as well as the Lincolnshire Wolds, with a further 20-30 mm of rain during the rest of today. At the same time narrow bands of heavy showers circulating around the low pressure centre will bring more localised heavy rain (10-15 mm within an hour) to parts of the southeast and East Anglia, where there has already been 20-30 mm of rain within the last 12 hours. The combination of rain and wind is likely to lead to unpleasant conditions on the roads with spray and surface water, the latter perhaps exacerbated by leaves blocking drains.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 11:15 on Mon, 13th Oct 2014 until 23:45 on Mon, 13th Oct 2014

Further heavy rain will occur across parts of southwest England this afternoon, easing later, whilst further spells of heavy rain will affect eastern parts of England into tonight. This an update of the warning first issued on Sunday morning.

The public should be aware of the risk of localised surface water flooding.
